Bailey & Cathy

Answer	Rationale & Details
The pigs stole all of the food for the wolf's children, so he goes to their house to take it back.	This is why the wolf goes to blow down each pig's house.

Group A

Answer	Rationale & Details
It was only the first two pigs that took the food, because they were too lazy to cook their own. So they stole the wolf's food and that is why the wolf blows the houses down.	The pigs just lazy. We know this because they were even too lazy to build a good house. So that is how we know they probably were too lazy to cook their own food and why they stole the food.

Groups A & B

Answer	Rationale & Details
It was only the first two pigs that took the food, because they were too lazy to cook their own. So they stole the wolf's food. But the wolf didn't know which pig stole his food, so he tries to blow down each house to figure out who did it.	The reason the wolf tried to blow down all three houses was because the pigs were hiding, and he didn't know which ones stole his food in the first place.

Whole Class

Answer	Rationale & Details
The first two pigs were too lazy to make their own food, so they snuck into the wolf's house and stole his children's food. The children were starving so he went to the pig's house to take the food back. All the pigs were hiding, so he tried to blow down all their houses. He realized that the first two pigs must have been the ones that stole the food because they were the lazy pigs in the story.	Since the two pigs are lazy and didn't build their houses correctly, this is how the wolf knows they were too lazy to make their own food and they must be the ones who stole the food.
